Please, please, please don't lift the cell phone ban on airplanes. I cannot imagine a worse scenerio than sitting between two yakkers on a three hour flight. So many people now have no rudimentary manners when using their phones. Given the tension that already exists aboard many flights, this seems like it would just add to the friction.

Airports and all public places are already full of people on their cells shouting details about their lives that no one else should have to know. At least in that situation, I can get up and move away.

As a matter of common courtesy, please don't trap me in a seat with no where to escape the sonic assault.
